

Palantir

Case Study

Palantir Technologies, established in 2003 by a team including Peter Thiel and Alex Karp, stands as a powerhouse in the realm of data analytics. Drawing inspiration from J.R.R. Tolkien's legendary "seeing stones," Palantir specializes in crafting software solutions for navigating the labyrinth of big data. With flagship products like Palantir Gotham, tailored for governmental and corporate use, and Palantir Foundry, catering to commercial enterprises, the company offers tools for integrating and analysing vast amounts of data. Despite grappling with debates surrounding privacy and government surveillance, Palantir continues to wield its expertise in data analysis, proving indispensable to a wide array of clients in various sectors.

Selected Mandate

Palantir, renowned for its services in the public sector, faced a challenge in penetrating the private sector market due to the absence of a Go-To-Market (GTM) strategy. Entrusted with this task, our mission was to establish a robust framework by assembling a team of adept Enterprise Sales and Management Consultants. This initiative aimed to cultivate a sales force capable of engaging with the top 250 businesses in the private sector. Through strategic planning and diligent execution, our efforts were directed towards bridging the gap between Palantir's offerings and the diverse needs of private enterprises, paving the way for successful market expansion and sustained growth.
