

Case Study

In 2017, Oracle hit a peak. Its share price was hitting new highs, giving the firm a valuation just shy of $200 billion. With market sentiment looking very strong, Oracle was ready to embark on a significant global sales hiring push.

In total, Oracle was looking to secure 1,000 enterprise sales hires across the European market. Behind the scenes, they were making a concerted push toward acquiring several SaaS vendors specific to the customer experience technology market, such as companies like Eloqua.

Within the technology market, Oracle is known to have one of the strongest internal recruitment frameworks, with over 100 recruiters in the European market focused on sales hires alone. Therefore, Oracle's need to engage external help is typically quite limited in this area.

However, Oracle's internal recruitment framework struggled in the Benelux market. This was primarily due to a damaged reputation that had built up in the Benelux region during the preceding years, making talent acquisition difficult.

Selected's Hiring Mandate

We were engaged by Oracle to attract key sales talent who would work to improve their reputation in the Benelux region. Building a reputation is no easy task, particularly with all the negative press that had been circulating for several years. In making the conscious decision to take the sales team in a new direction with a new crop of sales leads and in conjunction with that LOB, we were able to send out the right market signals to improve Oracle's standing in this region.

"I will not hesitate to use
Selected as our go-to agency of choice."

Outcome/ROI

We were able to secure a total of 10 enterprise hires for Oracle over a period of eight months in the Benelux region, including one sales director.

Of these hires, only two have left Oracle since 2017, which represents a substantial reduction in the historical attrition figures for Oracle in the Benelux region.

Although there is still more work needed in this particular area, we were able to help drive a significant change in the market perception of Oracle across digital transformation lead projects in the Benelux region. The approach not only to LOB but also to the enterprise software sales candidate market has added noticeably to Oracle's perception across the Benelux market.

Thanks to the results we achieved for Oracle, a six-month contract extension and retainer was offered to continue the strategy in the region.
